Rather Chew Than Marry.
A well-known actress was playing an engagement in Louisville. A Southern gentleman, a planter of considerable years and fortune, allowed her charms to overcome his long-sustained aversion to matrimony and he approached the actress with proposals of marriage. The following conversation then ensued:

"If I consent to become your wife, sir, I should first desire time to understand your disposition; second, I should desire your consent to two propositions."

"Name 'em," he said.
"You must consent to my staying on the stage ten years longer at least."

"Umph! Well, I don't think I would."

"And you must at once cease the use of tobacco—except in the form of cigars."

"W-h-a-t?" The planter started back in his chair, looked around the hotel parlor, and started at her; and from his lips there followed a prolonged whistle.

"Great gad, miss! surely—why—well!" and then he again started.

"I mean what I say."

"Come, now," he found voice to speak; "come, now, miss, let's compromise; I'll agree to your acting a year or two, but don't cut off my tobacco—don't, I'd—it would—don't."

"You have heard the alternative."

"Then, by Jackson, there's nothing more to be said. I like you—you suit me; but when it comes to choosin' between chewin' and marryin', give me the natural leaf—first, last, and always. Good-day, miss."

And as red in the face as a Southern sunset, he took his departure. She never saw him again.
